Caleb: Hey there, bubba.
Caleb: Make heads and/or tails of this sentence:
Caleb: "The FT reported that Brown would present the information he had obtained on Anonymous at the 20th RSA Conference in San Francisco, an annual gathering of computer security firms and experts."
me: source?
me: is that TP article?
me: yeah, that particular reporter is typo and error prone Caleb: You should probably let him know.
Caleb: That's my advice.
Caleb: Jesus christ.
Caleb: In a lengthy post on his Project PM wiki published in July, Brown highlighted emails between HBGary Federal CEO Aaron Barr and an executive from defense systems contractor TASC (formerly owned by Northrop Grummond) that reinforce earlier reports that the scope of the government's ambitions in the area of digital surveillance were was vast, encompassing not only the ability for intelligence workers to create and operate numerous "sock puppet" online identities to infiltrate groups like Anonynous online, but also that a joint-venture of defense and technology companies lead by TASC including such big names as Google and Apple were all collaborating on an effort to wrestle the contract for the program away from Northrop Grummond.
Caleb: That's all one sentence.
me: and Northrop Grummond is wrong
me: It's Northrop Grumman Caleb: Details.
Caleb: "Despite the fact that 'split,' from the group, Brown also told TPM's Idea Lab..."
me: I don't care anymore
Caleb: You're past it.
me: I'm over it. I'm turned OFF.
